ONCE MORE THE BLACKHANDERS

Spare no expense in trailing the blackhanders! That is the sentiment of the people of Ogden. Business men by the score have offered to subscribe to a reward to be offered for the bandits and the average citizen stands willing to assist in any manner possible. The only thing necessary to put all this human energy in action is an organization.

The police and sheriff's force is doing all possible, but the officers should have back of them, in tangible form, the resources of the community, and that can be secured by forming a committee of safety to be called on in case of necessity, as, for instance, to provide ways and means, if extraordinary efforts are to be decided on.

Detectives, trained in the work of searching out blackhanders, should be employed, and the suggestion has been made that Burns, the man who brought the McNamara to justice, be brought to Ogden.

There has been much talk as to what should be done, but so far there has been no getting together to plan a campaign.

CLAIMS UNITED STATES IS AIDING GREAT BRITAIN.

The following letter dated Trafalgar Buildings, Trafalgar Square, London, addressed to The Standard, is signed Lillian Scott Troy, and is the second communication of the kind sent us:

"Editor Standard: Now that the Carnegie project for the celebration of one hundred years of peace, between the United States and Great Britain is assuming such dangerous proportions, it behooves the press of the United States to sound the alarm against the giving of subscriptions by the public to this fund.

"The whole project is nothing more or less than a diplomatic move on the part of the British Government, to ward off the wrath of Germany, who is only staying her hand for reason of the implied threat that the United States will come to the rescue of Great Britain in the event of war between the latter nation and Germany.

"Andrew Carnegie, with the able assistance of Elhu Root and Joseph H. Choate, is the apostle who is spending millions to promulgate this doctrine, and it is high time that the United States ambassadors abroad, who are his tools in this misrepresentation, were recalled.

"The interference of the United States government in the Moroccan dispute between Germany and Great Britain was a disgraceful act of treason on the part of the handful of American officials who, without the knowledge or sanction of the American people, definitely informed Germany that any further insistence on her part of conditions which were not acceptable to Great Britain would mean that the United States would back Great Britain up with men and arms.

"Later, when William Howard Taft was elected president of the United States, Germany, who had not altogether lost faith in American neutrality, again approached Great Britain with a view to the settlement of the dispute. Immediately the United States Atlantic fleet was dispatched to English waters and Commander Sims of Admiral Mordock's flagship, the Minnesota, delivered an official speech in London in which he said that 'if England were threatened with an external foe she could count upon every man, every dollar and every drop of blood in the United States.'

"To the American public the dispatch of the Atlantic fleet to British waters in mid winter was regarded as a very pleasant and enjoyable cruise for the officers and men of the fleet. The truth of the move was known to the British and German governments and the Carnegie pro-British annexationists in the United States government.

"Germany was again obliged to stay her hand, but immediately increased her naval program.

"Having been subjected to American diplomatic intervention on two critical occasions, when pressing for a settlement of demands with Great Britain, Germany had every reason to believe that the United States government was representing public opinion in America by the pro-British sympathies manifested by two successive administrations.

"In consequence of this anti-German attitude in American diplomatic circles, the German government decided to manifest its resentment of American public professions of friendship for Germany, and diplomatic private threats, by refusing to take any part in the Panama Canal exposition at San Francisco in 1915.

"When the Wilson administration came into office the German government was keenly alive to note any change in the diplomatic antagonism of the United States. There appeared to be a strengthening of the Anglo-American bond by means of the Carnegie 'Peace' activities, and Germany was therefore only moved to a greater resentment when she learned that in January, 1914, the Atlantic fleet was to be again dispatched to European waters.

January, 1914, synchronizes with the date of settlement for German claims against Great Britain, and once again we shall find the power of the United States navy backing up Great Britain in European waters.

"This contemplated 'joint' of the Atlantic fleet to the Mediterranean in January next, is another instance of Great Britain holding our American fleet over the head of Germany as a big stick."

Lillian Scott Troy is "seeing things." The Carnegie project is for the purpose of further cementing the friendship of the English-speaking people and should be encouraged.

There is no evidence that any one in position to speak for the United States has ever offended Germany by any declaration of antagonism.

The visit of the American fleet to European waters could be as readily accepted as an act hostile to Great Britain as one unfriendly to Germany.

REWARD OFFERED FOR THE BANDITS

Governor Spry has offered a reward of $500 for the capture of one or more of the blackhanders who have operated in Ogden the last two years, and on top of that the city is to offer a large reward and private citizens have signified their desire to subscribe to a fund of $5000.

The reward should be large enough to tempt even one of the blackhanders to desert the gang. The bandits are in need of money; they are desperate fellows in search of gold. One of them, if offered $5000 with assurance that his neck would not be dislocated, might be tempted to turn informer. Rewards in the past have brought such results.

The reward at least should prove an incentive to men engaged in hunting down rogues and should bring about some new developments within a short time.

FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF ALASKA.

That Alaska is a land of wonders is the statement of Congressman Sydney Anderson, who says that most people think of the territory as a bleak, barren, frozen land; a mysterious country of little-known natural wonders; a place peopled largely by Eskimo and polar bears. In reality it is a vast empire, rich in possibilities beyond the wildest imagination of mankind. Alaska is 1,100 miles long, 800 miles wide, with an area of 590,000 square miles. It is a third larger than Norway, Sweden, and Finland combined, and nearly twice as large as the area now embraced by the thirteen original states. In the forty-six years it has been in the possession of the United States it has added to the world's wealth more than $200,000,000 in minerals, $70,000,000 in fur and sea products, and $150,000,000 in fishery products; more than $400,000,000 altogether. She produces annually more than $700 in value for each inhabitant—man, woman, and child—white, Indian and Eskimo. In the broad valleys of the Sushana, Kosokwim, and Tanana rivers there are 60,000 square miles of fertile agricultural land, while on the plateaus above are 40,000 square miles of grazing land.

"The climate is very much like that of Norway and Sweden," declares Congressman Anderson. "All of the hardy grains and vegetables have been and can be grown there with success. While the growing season is short, it will be remembered that Alaska has just as much sunshine as southern California. Three-fourths of this sunshine comes during the growing season between the 22nd of March and the 22nd of September, and in the middle of this season the days are twenty hours long.

"Alaska has 5,000 miles of navigable rivers centering almost in the middle of the territory near the junction of the Tanana with the Yukon. These rivers furnish a steamboat highway in the summer, and their frozen surfaces made admirable roads in the winter.

"Yet the surface of the possibilities of Alaska has been barely scratched. There are vast deposits of coal, copper, gold, and other minerals unmined—indeed, undiscovered. Great forests of fir and hemlock, untouched by the ax; immense areas of agricultural lands waiting for settlement and homes. Obviously, what Alaska needs is development. Not the mere exploitation of her mines and fisheries, but the development of all her resources; the settlement of her farm lands; in brief, a symmetrical civilization that will make her self-sustaining. We wish to make Alaska not only a good place to make money in, but, as well, a good place to live in."

NO ONE WHO DOES NOT BELIEVE IN IMMORTALITY

Services Sunday in First Presbyterian church were marked by a rich musical element. The Misses Hughes rendered several selections upon the harp and violin at the morning and evening services. The morning hour was especially a rich musical treat, the morning music being more classical than that at the later service.

Rev. Carver said in part at the morning service: "There are two types of men, those who place their first trust in themselves and those who place their first trust in God. The one is a man of faith, the other is known by self-confidence or pride. Not that self-confidence is not a most valued virtue when in its place, but that self-confidence when it is abnormal is vanity. The strange factor is that at the last all renounce self trust and rely upon God entirely. By this we mean that we have found no one who does not believe upon God. A dead man cannot even help himself.

"There must be some avenue of escape from failure if we rely on ourselves. This escape is found in overpowering conditions that caused defeat. It is characteristic of humanity that while it is ready to claim credit for success, it is unwilling to bear responsibility for failure. Tempting powers, our environment, adverse forces are the usual causes alleged for our defeat. Now it is clear to all that God does give the prime conditions of life. The time and place of birth, the race, color, and parentage, these are conditions beyond our control. But God does not give the results of life. We take our life as it is given and make or mar it ourselves. The poor, the blind, the weak, and maimed have won some of life's greatest victories. The more one reads biography the more one realizes that our human destiny of content is of our making.

"There are two clear types of worshippers. Those who worship God because they desire to and those who worship him because others do or because it is the thing to do in their locality. In days when men worshiped gods of wood and stone it mattered little how or why they gave offerings, but when we worship the true and living God who knoweth the secret thoughts of every heart, sincerity of purpose becomes the prime requisite. The two men in the fourth chapter of Genesis represent these two types.

"If thou doest not well sin croucheth at thy door," is the old, old text this morning. Cain sought God sincerely and this is the charge and reply of God. All blame is placed at his own life and at the results of his own deeds. Sin croucheth at thy door like a lurking tiger, waiting to spring upon him. Now we must always remember that in the old Hebrew the word for sin and the results or fruits of sin is the same. We separate the sin from its results. The olden people kept these two together. We do not at times even associate the sin with its harvest of weakness, burden or bondage. They so completely united them that one word stood for both.

"If we look well to most of the life failures we will find that the prime cause of their not doing well is the sin lurking at the door of their life. It is an insidious power ever ready to thwart and stifle any real desire or plan for a life advance. The guilt of past and present sin hangs over them as a pall and takes away the finer hopeful vision that should mark every life. The despair that follows past failings saps the energy of life and the habits formed in indulgence chain us to the old life and retard progress. The result is a weakness and deadness of all that should cause us to attempt an advance. Yes 'If thou doest not well sin croucheth at thy door.'

"But of thou lookest up thou shalt do well," the text continues. Now there is a two-fold power in the upward look to God. It tends to forget past failures and it fixes hope and faith upon God. Strong, very strong indeed must that one be who is able to live apart from God. Our creator knew our needs when he gave us so many spiritual aids to increase our power. Ours is the part of wisdom to lay firm hold on them."
